As I previously ruled, it is too late to take depositions. I hold that the Touhy regulations are applicable because the government is not a party, the regulations apply to former employees, and defendants seek the kind of information covered by the regulations. If, however, a witness agrees to testify at trial voluntarily, I will review the agency's final determination under an arbitrary standard set forth in the Administrative Procedure Act." While these new arguments are interesting, they do not undercut the use of the plain meaning doctrine where congressional intent to use a term as a "term of art" is ambiguous at best."
